The Roebling Chapter is the New York/New Jersey regional chapter of the national Society for Industrial Archeology. The chapter promotes the study of the physical survivals of the technological and industrial past in our region. We encourage and sponsor recording, field investigation, research, and the dissemination of information on all aspects of industrial archeology, history preservation and adaptive reuse.

Our activities include an annual meeting in January, a corn roast in the late summer, a symposium at Drew University in the fall, and ad hoc field trips to sites of interest year round. Our newsletter keeps members informed of chapter activities and items of IA interest. The Roebling Chapter hosted the 31st annual SIA national conference in June of 2002, as well as the 14th annual conference in 1985 and the annual fall tour in September 1987. We have often been cited as the most active of the SIA local chapters!

Roebling Chapter membership is $10 for the calendar year; couples who receive a single newsletter mailing pay the same amount. Memberships received after October 15th will be good for the following year. You may join the chapter without being a member of the national SIA, but national membership is encouraged and is required if you wish to be a voting chapter member. The national SIA web site is at <http://www.sia-web.org>. The Roebling Chapter web site is <http://www.roeblingSIA.org>.
